Taita Hills

The Taita Hills, sometimes also spelled as Teita Hills, are a Precambrian mountain range located in the Taita-Taveta County in south-eastern Kenya. The hills consist of three massifs: Dawida, Sagalla in the southern side of Voi township and Kasigau in the south near the border of Tanzania. The Dawida massif is the largest and tallest of the three, with an altitude of 2,228 meters (7,310 ft) above sea level at its highest peak, Vuria. Dawida has three other main peaks: Iyale, Wesu, and Susu.

Dream·Explore·Discover

The Taita Hills, with others in the Eastern Arc Mountains, were formed more than one hundred million years ago. About thirty million years ago, the area was covered by extensive rainforest. During a cooler and drier period some ten million years ago, the lowland forests were converted to savanna, leaving the mountain ranges as "islands" where the tropical forests continued to flourish. The isolation of each mountain range has led to a great deal of endemism, and a very diverse flora and fauna. Some of the other mountain ranges are well-forested, but the Taita Hills retain just 6 km<sup>2</sup> (2.3 sq. mi) of forest. The Taita Hills rise steeply from the Tsavo West National Park.

The hills are also known for their moist forests with a unique fauna and flora. More than 20 endemic species of African violets (e.g., Saintpaulia teitensis) occur exclusively in that region. Known endemic bird species are the Taita thrush (Turdus helleri) and the Taita apalis (Apalis fuscigularis). The Taita falcon (Falco fasciinucha) and the Taita fiscal (Lanius dorsalis) were first discovered at the hills but occur elsewhere, too. An amphibian in the genus Boulengerula occurs only in the Taita Hills. The Sagala caecilian (Boulengerula niedeni) is a critically endangered worm-like amphibian that lives in the Taita Hills.

The native Taita people are living at the edge of the forests and farming the soil, which is very productive. The region was severely logged in the past and the remaining indigenous forest is now part of a nature reserve, the Taita Hills Wildlife Sanctuary. On the plains and foothills surrounding the hills, the land is predominately used for cropping and grazing. The largest fragments of forest are located in the most inaccessible areas. The land is being degraded by deforestation, the lowering of the water table, and soil erosion. The annual rainfall varies from 500 mm (20 in) in the lowlands to more than three times this amount in the mountain zone.

Day 11 Taita Hills

Day will be spent bird watching, touring the Kenyatta Caves in Wundanyi and visiting Njama Mizango cultural group. Activities here include cultural food cooking, drum playing, showing and viewing other local artefacts of the Taita community, dances and singing. Lunch will be at the centre. Return to your place of residence for the night.

It has been suggested that Kenyatta caves also known as Kino caves were first used as a refuge from the colonial troops – the British in Kenya and the Germans in Uganda. Later and perhaps more interestingly, it thought that it is at one of these caves that Mzee Jomo Kenyatta, Kenya's first president used to meet with fellow elders to discuss local affairs.
